At completion, the residence was described as a "model" rental unit, "just the kind Lake City demands at this time." The first renters were L.C. Dubois and family; Whinnery owned this house into the 1940s and on numerous occasions it was used as employee housing for workers at Whinnery's Lake City store or his lower Lake Fork ranch.

It was owned by James Kendrick from 1956 to 1989, during which time the decorative shingles were removed and the original lap siding covered with naturally stained vertical wood siding. A subsequent owner removed the 1950s siding in the mid-1990s, revealing the original clapboards dating from the home's construction. It is owned today by Amber Lasater and Matt Ingram.
